A diagnosis of breast cancer in your 20’s or 30’s forces you to focus on your health in unexpected ways.

At an age when relationships, career and personal goals are priorities, your questions and concerns are different than older women with breast cancer. It is possible to through cancer treatment without setting everything else aside.

The opportunity to connect with other young women diagnosed with breast cancer may help you feel like you’re not alone. If there are questions you need to talk through or conversations no one else seems to understand, this group may be just what you need.

CancerCare is currently recruiting participants who are young adults (ages 20 – 39) that have been diagnosed with breast cancer. The group is led by a professional oncology social worker and will run for 12 weeks.
